Meet your future classmates.

In these student profiles, you’ll find that no two paths through Harvard are the same, but that all students have access to incredible opportunities and devoted faculty as they explore their interests and find new passions.
Your Harvard experience will be a journey—one filled with incredible opportunities that support you in your intellectual, social, and personal growth. At Harvard, you can ask questions and make discoveries that will shape your future and the world around you; you’ll take intellectual risks and discover unanticipated interests along the way; you’ll make lifelong friends, be exposed to new perspectives, and celebrate your own voice and identity. We’re excited to welcome you to the Harvard community. We hope you’ll join us.
“My entryway got dinner every Sunday night, and if I did not show up for that or our weekly study break, someone would text me to see how I was doing. I enjoyed having that community to cheer me up, support me during tough weeks, and celebrate when everything went well. The highlight of my year was living with this diverse group of people who thought differently than I do. I learned to listen closely, be a better friend, and grow in my beliefs.”

Anshi Moreno Jimenez, ’19, Boston, MA
“I can’t imagine living anywhere else. From the day I moved in, the Pforzheimer House upperclassmen were unbelievably welcoming and understanding of my, and all of the newly-minted sophomores’ adjustment to life in the house. That did so much to help establish the sort of community and presence within the house that makes seeing people you know in the halls, laundry rooms, gym, or dining hall such a joy.”

Julius Wade, ’20, Miami, FL
“Through a research assistant position with a professor in the Government department, I’ve been able to work part time for two semesters and through the summer on a project very close to my heart: politics in my home state. The professor I work with is incredibly supportive, and has given me a lot of autonomy to self-direct the research. I could never have imagined conducting my own research in high school, and never even thought it was something I would be interested in. I’m so grateful to have had the experience—it has been one of the most fulfilling and intellectually engaging experiences thus far.”

Caroline Tervo, ’18, Wilmington, NC
“If you look for it, there is a community on campus ready to support any endeavor you’re interested in. For me, that came largely in the form of performing arts groups for music and comedy, but extended into other realms like video game design. The biggest new interest for me when I arrived was improv comedy, and I was thrilled to find I could immediately immerse myself in a thriving community of students interested not just in doing the same thing, but in teaching and learning from one another.”

Grant Hoechst, ’18, Falmouth, ME
“I always like to say that we have the “best of both worlds” attending school in Cambridge, a vibrant city in and of itself, but also being situated so close to a hustle-and-bustle, metropolitan area like Boston! Socially interacting with students from schools nearby like Tufts and MIT, having a term-time internship just across the street from BU, and even just going for runs that stretch along the Charles and into downtown have all greatly enriched my Harvard experience.”

Minnie Jang, ’18, Ellicott City, MD
